

Home Systems Protection

A traditional homeowners policy covers a great deal – but what it leaves out can sometimes cost customers thousands of dollars. For example: What happens if a furnace or central air conditioning unit breaks down? Or a costly appliance? Or TV or computer?

Home Systems Protection has been designed to plug those common insurance gaps with the broadest breakdown coverage available. This insurance allows homeowners to:

- Protect systems like heating, cooling, water and power.
- Cover appliances, equipment and devices for communications, security and entertainment.

Less expensive than warranties

Home Systems Protection offers whole-house coverage for far less money than alternatives such as home warranty programs, specific equipment warranties or maintenance contracts. It's also much simpler than trying to maintain a patchwork of expensive and opaque warranties. Unanticipated costs from equipment breakdown can quickly burden a family's finances.

Home Systems Protection allows families to avoid these potential expenses by bundling protection into the insurance they're already paying for.

Covers damage you can't even see

Computers with microscopic circuits control the functions of virtually all home equipment sold today – so trying to obtain warranty coverage can be harder because damage is difficult to see. But with Home Systems Protection, hard-to-detect breakdowns to these microelectronics are paid for thanks to the included Electronic Circuitry Impairment (ECI) coverage, which extends the traditional physical damage "trigger" to include disruptions at the sub-microscopic level.

Some examples of covered items:

- Boilers and furnaces
- Air conditioning systems
- Refrigerators and freezers
- Electrical panels, circuit breakers, wiring
- Emergency generators
- Geothermal and solar installations
- Well pumps
- Security systems and electronic gates
- Pool and spa equipment
- Kitchen and laundry appliances
- Home theater and audio systems
- Computers, tablets and smartphones
- Health monitoring systems
- Home exercise equipment
